

Ferraristi By Mitchel R. DeFrancis

I attend a lot of cars shows and occasionally I overhear people talk about how much they love cars. I love seeing automotive enthusiasm. I appreciate that enthusiasm because I am a car lover, I know what they mean, I've been there and I'm still there.

I love all types of cars, but my genuine passion lies with the cars from Maranello. Ferraris have become my passion.

Everyone has a passion for something. Sometimes a "passion" can end up being a bad thing or sometimes it can be a blessing. My wife thinks I'm stark raving mad, but my passion has driven me to collect everything and just about anything with a Ferrari logo on it. I am a Ferrari owner whose thirst for Ferrari "stuff" has not been quenched by any stretch of the imagination.

Francisco Baracca's mother gave Enzo Ferrari rights and ownership of the prancing horse you see today on all the candy colored supercars running around town. The Cavallino did not always look like it does today; it has gone through a few slight phases during the past 70 plus years.

"Oh, that prancing black stallion" I think in my head. That mark is one of the most recognizable logos on earth. This emblem has captivated me, fascinated me and completely intrigued me. You may ask why. I am a severe, devoted Ferraristi. "What the hell is a Ferraristi? I know what a Ferrari is, but what is this?" you may ask.

I will tell you.

THE
AUTHORITY®

Before I was born my father and his Army buddies were stationed in Livornia, Italy, in the early '60s. Those were different times, and a 250 GT Ferrari was just another used up sports car. But my old man and his cronies cut the mufflers off of the that old 250 and would race it up and down the streets in Livornia along with an old Alfa Romeo and Lancias.

Why couldn't my Dad have brought that 250 home instead of that bloody Lancia Aurelia coupe? Dad was a hardcore auto enthusiast who was exposed to Ferraris and other sports cars. His love for cars was conveyed onto me, apparently along with his hereditary baldness genes, but I digress.

During my exciting childhood, Dad had his Lancia Aurelia, then a 1930 Ford Model A coupe, then a few more Lancias, a couple of Maseratis, a blue '64 Mustang Convertible and now more recently came a gaggle of Ferrari Mondial Cabriolets. That is another article altogether!

I was born in Atlanta then we moved to Dallas for Dad's real estate companies. We moved back to Atlanta in 1982. This was the year that really kick-started my love for Ferrari.

My best friend Phil Thomas and I went to one of the International Auto Shows and saw some Ferraris there that blew my mind. Later that spring, our school class went on a field trip to Fernbank Science Center in Atlanta. On the way there, a screaming Giallo zonker of a 308 GTB went by and that shape and sound truly haunted me; it beckoned me to want more of that sound.

I had to know more about these cars. I started photographing every single Ferrari I encountered. We would follow Ferraris seen in the wild. Phil and I would have his mom drive us to FAF Motorcars in Tucker, Ga., in her baby blue Ford Tempo and leave us there.

Ironically, I now work at one of the largest new and used Ferrari parts company in the world, T.Rutlands Ferrari Parts in Tucker, Ga., less than a couple of miles from where my love for these cars began.

I distinctly remember one day she dropped us off in 1984 when I was first confronted with a 288 GTO parked out front. That thing was a jaw-dropping car with sensuous flowing lines and mirror red paint finish. It was a 308 GTB but more aggressive. I loved it.

Around the corner were half a dozen 308s, Mondials, Boxers and Testarossas. There was a black Lamborghini Countach with gold wheels there too; it truly was a sensory overload. The desire for such a gorgeous machine was emblazoned in my brain.

Eventually your faithful author would have his own Prancing Horse. In 2001, I eventually added a Ferrari to my collection. I have a 1984 308 GTS Quattrovalve S/N 51665, one of a very few painted in Nero Metallica. That Ferrari is still in our family collection and will be passed down to my two sons, Graham Enzo and Austin Fangio.

When I was 15 years old, I could only afford magazines, brochures, pins, stickers and anything else I could buy. I kept buying and buying and keeping everything. Instead of going to the arcade like all my other buddies and drop quarters into those mindless video games, I bought Ferrari memorabilia.

My passion and "hunger" for more, made me into a Ferrari amoeba. I absorbed and engulfed other Ferrari memorabilia collections just to fill holes in my collections. I've purchased items from around the globe and from dozens and dozens of different Ferrari memorabilia collectors.

Out of sheer size and quantity I concentrated my collections to a dozen different types of Ferrari memorabilia. I absolutely love any type of Ferrari correspondence such as factory paperwork, service bulletins, blueprints, signed letters, Ferrari Club of America bulletins and signed letters and old FCA event paperwork, keys, keychains, lapel pins, factory photos, factory sales brochures and press kits, Ferrari event stickers, patches, business cards, license plates, passes, lanyards and actual Ferrari emblems.

It sounds like a lot, and it really is, considering I have hundreds of each of these items.

Ferrari stickers and patches. I really like Ferrari related stickers and patches. Some are factory issued, some were printed and handed out in limited quantities at Ferrari club events all around the world. Stickers were disposable items as most were tossed out or stuck onto a car or a toolbox. I really got into Ferrari stickers after my first Ferrari factory visit in 1989. It was a somber time at the factory with Enzo's recent August 1988 passing. I was upset that I would never get to meet him.

We never contacted a dealer or the factory for our visit; we just showed up at the front gate, and they let us in. We were shown around and some guys gave me some brochures, it was an awesome experience. I then saw the door at the factory that was completely covered with Ferrari stickers from all different global Ferrari clubs and events. I so desperately to see that wonderful collage of yellows, greens and reds and that satisfying black prancing horse again. The only way to see it again was to visit Maranello again or create a personal narrative of that vision. Long before eBay, I had to send letters or make phone calls to buy Ferrari stickers.

I got more involved with the clubs and attended vintage racing events and car shows all around the South-eastern U.S. Today, I have met and made friends with several remarkable collectors who only collect Ferrari memorabilia. Some of those notable collectors are Cyrille Jaquinot of Biarritz, France; Fede Garcia of Spain and Christian Richard of France. A few more of my favorite collectors are Barry Cross and Tony Randazzo, both from Pennsylvania. They have the top Ferrari sticker collections in the world. Their collections are worth more than many Ferrari cars.

Some stickers are worth $2 to $3 each while some rare event stickers can bring more than $200 on eBay. Some vintage FCA patches with the old logos are going for $10 to $15 each while some patches from old Ferrari club annual events can bring $175. They are a wonderful, colorful and inexpensive way to get into collecting Ferrari memorabilia.

Ferrari lapel pins. I enjoy lapel pins; they are like little colorful jewels. I decided to concentrate and collect Ferrari related pins, such as race pins, event pins, event participant pins and commemorative pins. I also decided the best way to display the pins was to arrange another beautiful collage in a nice shadowbox. I love the rare event pin and like factory-issued pins. Some run-of-the-mill Ferrari lapel pins can cost $5 to $10, while some rare handmade pins from a vintage event can cost $250 to $300.

Ferrari keys and key chains. In my teen years I bought some factory key blanks as a joke to myself that they would soon be a spare for my own car -- my own way to focus and reach a goal. Several of the collections I purchased during the past 20 years have contained some key fobs and keys or a pair of keys to someone's Ferrari that were lost decades ago. Some Ferrari club events would have a keychain in the goodie bags along with the stickers, patches and pins. Ferrari dealerships and independent repair shops would sometimes have their own key chains. I love key chains that commemorate an event or special race.

I have a few of the famous folding keys that were issued to 328s and F40s. I have some vintage keys with the prancing horse embossed on the key head; some of them are just the horse, some are the Scuderia Ferrari SF shields and among the most rare factory keys are the Dino keys.

Ferrari emblems. Factory emblems are really beautiful items that were made in limited quantities. Most early Ferraris did not have emblems except the front nose badge. Several of the high end and custom-made Ferraris did have emblems such as 250 GTs, 275, 330, 500 Superfast and 410SAs. I cannot stand to see a crashed or wrecked Ferrari. If I can buy any bits off the car I usually do to make artwork out of them and usually the only thing worth displaying is an emblem.

Ferrari had emblems on all the '80s and '90s cars then emblems seemed to fade in and fade out of more recent model. Today, some cars have a nice model script emblem on the dashboard. I've collected about 100 Ferrari original emblems and started creating another collage!

Ferrari memorabilia is a lot of fun to collect and some memorabilia is extremely valuable. In the near future I am hoping to open and curate a museum of Ferrari cars and memorabilia in the Southeastern U.S.

I hope I was able to spotlight an all-too-common case of Ferrari love. When everything in your life encompasses Ferrari, you are Ferraristi.

Buy, sell and collect – musings from a Ferraristi By Chad Ensz

We often use eBay as a tool in Ferrari research. It is an amazing tool for searching and finding Ferraris and Ferrari related items.

We have also told many subscribers that eBay may not be a good place to advertise your Ferrari. For some it appearing there represents a black mark to a car's history.

A large amount of scammers have tainted this great concept in the online auction arena. It is important to note that not all Ferraris listed on eBay are worrisome propositions. But the reality is the same as at a car dealership. There is always questions to ask and decisions whether to sell the car on the lot, trade it to another dealership for more appropriate used car inventory in exchange or dump it on the wholesale market.

When a subscriber inquires about a Ferrari that was at a wholesale auction I quickly bring some air into my clinched teeth making that sucking sound that means "yikes."

I begin to ask myself the following questions:

- Why is this car not worthy of taking up space on the retail lot?
- Why is the car not good enough to transfer to a dealer that deals potentially in the more exotic and would gladly offer in trade appropriate inventory for this Ferrari?
- What was wrong with the car that less money was accepted for the vehicle with the decision to dump it on the wholesale market?

The same premise works for Ferraris on eBay as within dealerships therefore raising similar questions:

- Why was the car not offered in a Ferrari or appropriate publication, newsletter or site?
- Why wasn't it traded in on the next purchase?
- And most significantly, why was the car offered on a site known for cheap deals via a quick auction format?

Now I will be clear, I have researched quite a few Ferraris on eBay for customers and some of them have turned out to be splendid examples. The same can be said for wholesale auto auction houses (nothing like the quality of RM, Gooding and Mecum) as there can be a great car in the massive mix of deadbeats.

Steve Barney of Sport Auto in North Carolina has many times reminded me that good – even great – cars show up for sale at these local auction houses. Barney has gone as far as giving me reasons why a fantastic vehicle would appear at such an auction available to the highest bidder, which is almost always a dealer like himself.

So to say a car at a wholesale auction or eBay is a piece of crap or has a skeleton in its closet is indeed painting with an extremely wide brush.

The bottom line is these formats still represent an ideal place to dump a red-headed stepchild. eBay and local wholesale auction houses can easily get a bad car off the owner's hands quickly and although for less profit, the goal of washing their hands of said vehicle is accomplished.

There is no way a proper authorized Ferrari or exotic car dealer will be fooled by a previous flood car, a badly wrecked and repaired car, a stolen and recovered car or one with a bad valve or a major mechanical issue. They are knowledgeable and have time to closely inspect said car. However, on eBay or a wholesale auction folks can get burned.

Buyers are at fault here as well. Scams happens because it is at these formats that someone is thinking they can get a deal. "It's worth the risk since there are more margins to be made buying on eBay or at wholesale auctions," some people say. And, margins are more important to some sellers than properly representing a car.

Want a much better chance of getting the right car? Then deal with a dealer, broker, publication (such as the Ferrari Market Letter that screens its classified ads), or an individual seller that has his ducks lined up. Another source can be from automotive events and club festivities as these are also great ways to make an honest effort to screen out the scum.

Fair or not, that is the perception eBay and wholesalers face. Perceptions are realities.

What is strange is that this perception only applies to cars on eBay. With memorabilia, the sky is the limit. Possess a rare and desirable piece of Ferrari item literature and the majority of the time you'll reach a market correct value if not more!

With a trusted and reliable seller, as indicated in by his feedback, lists a vintage Ferrari yearbook in excellent condition with the signatures of deceased, significant figures in Ferrari history, you can't stop the bidding.

Recently while doing research of nefarious Ferraris on eBay we ran across some other related items like parts and tool kits, etc.

I was always told an original and complete vintage Ferrari tool kit was worth $25,000 to the right buyer. Most buyers start with some items and strive to complete a tool kit piecemeal, so to see actual sales for complete tool kits surpass the price of a proper used boat or nice, high-end, late-model used car was that of lore.

Well, now it is factual. Two vintage Ferrari tool kits recently sold on eBay for $19,995 and $16,999.99.

The period these came from was mid- to late-1960s to early-1970s and for 275s and Daytonas, respectively. Gerald had some authentic Ferrari tools lying around he showed me and then pointed out what to look for, but I'd be weary of judging either one of these tool kits based on the images.

With these kinds of high values in play, you'd better know a lot about the finest of details regarding each tool before making any bids. I always feared aged re productions or tools from a similar but different model being passed off as 100 percent correct -- when they're not -- in a particular kit.

Another interesting item sold was a clear engine cover for an F50 that went for $20,900. This is surely an item that, if needed, would demand a stratospheric value as they don't sell these at your local salvage yard or NAPA. So what is interesting about this result is if the buyer needed it and coughed up the big bucks (making this the value) or someone bought it knowing that if an F50 owner ever needs one the price could double. So what's an F50 engine cover worth? $20,900 for now.

That's why I comb the sold listings and not the live auctions. Folks on eBay have a bad habit with automotive memorabilia of listing them at ridiculous buy-it-now prices hoping for a buyer to take the bait. If one peruses the completed or active listings you'll see so many examples of this. Completed listings are both sold and items that no one chose to purchase. It is there you'll see examples of misinformed, opportunistic or greedy sellers who try to pick off the slow moving weaker members of the herd utilizing a laughable price as his weapon.

Sadly, this occasionally works and often perpetuates falsities in the market. A rare Ferrari item sold for far more than expected recently, and soon thereafter another one reached a similar high plateau. I knew of a few of these that could be bought, and I contacted a source and secured the deal. I was going to turn a nice profit on eBay. Then reality set in, but before it did other owners of such items flooded the market in hopes of a handsome sale. All of these auctions were "no sales" and soon thereafter they can be seen available at half (or less) the two anomaly sales. I sold mine to a collector at a loss but was happy to lick my wounds and learn from my mistakes.

My strategy now will be timing my listings or do what Cathy did with a bit of Gerald's stuff we didn't need -- she sold for a bit less to a collector/reseller and experienced a simple, easy, clean and quick transaction. I may learn from that as well.

If I had the good stuff such as vintage Ferrari yearbooks, tool kits, Ferrari watches, owner's manuals and pouches, luggage and desirable parts it wouldn't matter how I sell them. Those items will always fetch a tidy sum.

Ferrari watches continue to amaze me with prices realized. Panerai, Girard-Perregaux and such often bring $6,000 to $10,000. I'd go Rolex to be sure the value will always be there, but it seems Ferrari watches are quite the item of choice and maybe more desirable, albeit a smaller audience to sell to.

I saw an original 1950 Ferrari yearbook that sold for $12,999.99, and this is much less a book and actually more a brochure. It isn't much to study or to hold but it is rare, and the reprints also have moderate value. You know you're on to something when the fake version of your real version is expensive and desirable!

Another yearbook -- this one a rare 1952 -- recently sold for $9,203.40.

What I noticed about these two yearbook results was the bidding quantity (or lack thereof). These only sold with one bid each so someone wanted them at those prices versus a bidding result that truly reflects true market value. But we're talking about such rare and desirable items that there's not a lot to compare against. Currently, these items are worth precisely what they brought because someone was willing to pay that.

I'm intrigued by another sale -- that of a new, seven-piece luggage set for a 599 that collected $7,175. An engineless Dino 308 GT4 basically sold for the same amount. What bothers me here is the concept that 599s -- although fabulous cars -- have been produced in such quantities that they will never be collectible per se.

If 2,000 or so bucks will get me a 512 TR luggage set and that car may actually appreciate, why spend the seven grand for the 599? Sensibility is often lacking in a passionate Ferrari purchase. Passion squashes good sense way too often.

Dino 206/246 jacks will bring somewhere around $5,000, and there are multiple transactions on eBay to back this up.

Good steering wheels from 275, 330 and 365 Ferraris can fairly consistently bring a seller more than $3,000.

Are you an opportunistic Italian car mechanic who five-fingered a handheld diagnostic tool? If so they can fetch a tad more than $5,000 if you're lucky but the transaction should safely provide you 3,500 dirty dollars.

Ferrari Colnago bicycles can bring up to -- or more than -- $3,000 on occasion, depending on model.

Here's a vexing set of items for hungry Ferraristi -- Ferrari laptops and cellphones are items often seen selling for $5,000. Without understanding that market my initial reaction is that isn't this technology and isn't technology outdated the day it's purchased? For years I've questioned these two product's value. Heck, I bought the best Apple Mac I could afford and a few months later a commercial had me a sad clown after witnessing the features of the NEWEST Apple Mac computer. Is the Ferrari label worth that much that it makes old technology desirable?

Wheels are also great trading items. Old ones are valuable and desirable for restorations while newer model wheels can usually be purchased to replace damage or more importantly upgrade and older model with a newer model look. A set of late model wheels can bring $1,500 to $7,000.

If you want deals on eBay, look at lots. I've bought all manner of lots that yield me treasures with the turds. The seller lists a group of Italian car stuff and there's a valuable or desirable Ferrari item within. Buy it, sell the Lancia, Lambo, Maserati and such items to try and make back a healthy portion of the expenditure and the Ferrari item is ready for your collection or to properly resale as gravy money.

As an aggressive eBay seller many years ago I spe cialized in automobilia and “fan shop” type of sports-wear. You name the sport, and I had many teams covered with licensed goods. I used to be a product manager for a company that specialized in this market. As a perk I received extra salesman samples and product submission samples, which collected until the garage was full. I packaged teams up like a lot – I used my keen marketing skills and called it a collection – of St. Louis Cardinals caps and stocking hats for example. These lots/collections went for crazy money, and I was coasting until the company reached financial issues and laid off more than half of management.

My gig was up, but I used my lessons to expand my profits with my automobile memorabilia. Today this philosophy doesn't work. Lots are ways to usually dump a group of crap, and it seems that nine times out of 10, lots bring less than individual sales.

As Ferraristi continue to call here offering to sell their automobilia, I continue to tell them if making the most money is the quest, then individually sell the items and do not group them into lots. This is met with much disdain because now the time needed to sell the items has been greatly increased. The more one invests into something, the more one can reap.

Too many older, non-computer savvy Ferraristi want to dump their collection and are at a point in their life that Ferraris no longer are a significant aspect. They want a premium for their collections because at one time they could get that. That is the wrong approach to take.

First, if I or the Ferrari Market Letter buys the items, we need to make money, so there has to be some meat left on the bone. Second, the Ferrari memorabilia boom has past. Thirdly, there are always at least a couple of items in these collections that interest a reseller like us. Unfortunately, any fair offers are cut off with, “I don't want to break up the items, and it's all or none.” This is almost universally met with “none” from us.

We suggest the only way to get anywhere near the boom prices is to piece-meal the collection out on eBay.

From time to time, I offer to place items on eBay for friends or fellow collectors, but they don't want to share the profits with the person doing the grunt work they can't or don't want to do. This is precisely why many high-priced collections are still with the dinosaurs that collected them.

In this lesson is one the Ferrari Market Letter knows well though our sorrows. Most Ferrari books are not worth what they once were. We'd need another article to cover the end of print matter as a valuable commodity, but you can almost count on most Ferrari books yielding no profit whatsoever, even expect losses. There's just less interest and supply far outweighs demand from the days when you couldn't print enough Ferrari books and you'd sell every last one for a tidy, ludicrous sum.

There are still some titles and autographed copies that will reach great heights on eBay, but this is now the exception and not the rule unless you have for example old Ferrari yearbooks. And on this vein, new yearbooks are a tragic waste of time to sell. They are great to look through, but buy them used on eBay and shelf them with your collection they are valueless.

eBay is not only a place for the higher-end memorabilia. There is so much entry-level Ferrari stuff to get started with that you can cut your teeth on before moving to the big stuff. Or better, master a collection of less expensive items like Mitch DeFrancis did utilizing the beauty of pins, stickers and patches. Where else but eBay can you find a Ferrari club event item from 20 years ago that was held in New Zealand?

eBay is great for that and a weak spot for me when it comes to scale models. I don't own a Ferrari but have hundreds at my house. The few highly collectible ones I acquired have long since been sold to buy the lesser expensive ones that have character or were similar to ones I had or saw as a child. My collection has turned into a quantity vs. quality situation, but none of the items in the collection are anything but like-new condition and I love each one. That's what makes my ensemble a treasured part of my automobilia collection – I enjoy them.

Besides those little Ferraris, I try to gather all manner of factory released pictures and documents. I've sold my few Ferrari brochures off since they are at a premium and everyone knows what they are worth. I took my profits and invested them into deals and lesser priced items with more potential to be money-makers. The best perspective is that if I can't end up selling most of what I have, I'll keep it because I acquired it due to the fact that I actually liked it.

Since Ferrari brochures became too rich for my blood, I have moved into brochures from other makes and lately have sought old and uncommon cars brochures to collect. At car shows and swap meets these are the items that don't sell because there are – for example – no Lancia owners there. But on eBay there are plenty of Lancia guys willing to spend on an item they've never seen before.

Now I just need to find time to eBay my many plastic tubs of automobilia, but if time is evasive I am happy to know I have such an eclectic collection of automotive memorabilia to go through and enjoy. Better yet, when another gear head comes over, we go into my basement “cave” where I can show my stuff off, and that's as fun as enjoying it by myself.

In conclusion, the worst offender when it comes to the desire to look at my automobilia is DeFrancis, the author of the other article in this issue. But as I tell my irritated wife who thinks the yard needs mowing, “Looking at as well as talking about this car stuff is like a child visiting Disney World to us car guys!”

And that's why we can't stop constantly looking over eBay and forgoing the photographing and documenting of cars at an event just to wander over to the swap meet or automobilia area.

Mitch calls himself a member of the Ferraristi. I'd say we're just automotive addicts.

LARGE ROSSO WRX 1/8 scale Ferrari 643 Formula 1 model kit. Brand new in box, mint condition. Saved since 1992, rare and not many still unbuilt. Manufacturer's factory burned down mysteriously and the owner subsequently had legal problems! When built this kit is superb and will blow away the other 1/8 scale models. Body and many suspension parts are metal with the rest of the parts a combination of materials. Originally came with stickers instead of decals. This kit includes a VERY RARE decal set showing the correct Marlboro logos for both drivers. Part of an upgrade kit with garage wheels that the car has mounted as if the pit crew was working on it in the garage. Stored in a dry and clean place, even the box is like new. High res picture available on request. Rare brand new set of decals made in Japan. All original markings in high quality decal form. Whoever builds the kit can apply fresh decals and clear coat before assembly. Free pick-up in S. California or shipped only within USA with insurance. Sold as is. $1,500. 3810

308 GT4 FRONT SEAT, drivers side, left hand drive. Bought to re-dye and make into an office chair but ran out of, time, space and energy. Good overall condition for its age and the leather and foam are in good shape. Burgundy color, probably red "Rosso VM 3171". Red carpet and red seat belt material on the bottom, but could have been custom as Ferrari provided Connolly leather in a burgundy color. One of the plastic head rest inserts missing but still available at a reasonable cost. One incorrect screw on the back and right hand side has a cut in the piping and various scratches and wear. No rails, but the adjustment mechanism works fine. Seat will ship disassembled and require a large box. To reassemble you will need a metric Allen wrench and screwdrivers. $150 shipping to USA only unless an international buyer is willing to pay all extra shipping charges. Contact me before bidding internationally. Free pick-up available in S. California. Sold as is. $600. 3810
